

Corelli

Concerti grossi, Op. 6

Cantilena

Adrian Shepherd

collect

Arcangelo Corelli (1653–1713)

Concerti grossi, Op. 6

COMPACT DISC ONE

1 Concerto No. 1 in D major 13:38

- I Largo – Allegro – Largo – Allegro
- II Largo –
- III Allegro
- IV Allegro

Angus Anderson • Adrian Davies violins

2 Concerto No. 2 in F major 11:04

- I Vivace – Allegro – Adagio – Vivace – Allegro –
Largo andante
- II Allegro
- III Grave – Andante largo –
- IV Allegro

Andrew Martin • Jane Reid violins

3 Concerto No. 3 in C minor 10:09

- I Largo –
- II Allegro
- III Grave – Vivace
- IV Allegro

Adrian Davies • Andrew Martin violins

4 Concerto No. 4 in D major 10:23

- I Adagio – Allegro
- II Adagio – Vivace
- III Allegro – Allegro

Andrew Martin • Andrew Morris violins

5 Concerto No. 5 in B flat major 12:18

- I Adagio – Allegro – Adagio
- II Adagio
- III Allegro
- IV Largo – Allegro

Angus Anderson • Adrian Davies violins

6 Concerto No. 6 in F major 13:55

- I Adagio –
- II Allegro –
- III Largo –
- IV Vivace
- V Allegro

Andrew Martin • Jane Reid violins

TT 71:47

COMPACT DISC TWO

1 Concerto No. 7 in D major 11:02

- I Vivace – Allegro – Adagio
- II Allegro
- III Andante largo –
- IV Allegro
- V Vivace

Angus Anderson • Andrew Martin violins

2	Concerto No. 8 in G minor	16:46
	Fatto per la Notte di Natale (Christmas Concerto)
	I Vivace – Grave
	II Allegro –
	III Adagio – Allegro – Adagio
	IV Vivace
	V Allegro –
	VI Pastorale. Largo
	Angus Anderson • Adrian Davies violins
3	Concerto No. 9 in F major	9:39
	I Preludio. Largo
	II Allemanda. Allegro
	III Corrente. Vivace
	IV Gavotta. Allegro
	V Adagio – Minuetto. Vivace
	Adrian Davies • Helena Moroney violins
4	Concerto No. 10 in C major	14:10
	I Preludio. Andante largo
	II Adagio – Corrente. Vivace
	III Allegro
	IV Minuetto. Vivace
	Angus Anderson • Lorna Buchanan violins

5	Concerto No. 11 in B flat major	9:46
	I Preludio. Andante largo
	II Allemanda. Allegro
	III Adagio – Andante largo
	IV Sarabanda. Largo
	V Giga. Vivace
	Robert Jennings • Jane Reid violins
6	Concerto No. 12 in F major	10:24
	I Preludio. Adagio
	II Allegro
	III Adagio –
	IV Sarabanda. Vivace
	V Giga. Allegro
	Andrew Martin • Andrew Morris violins
		TT 72:11

Cantilena
Adrian Shepherd

violin	Angus Anderson	viola	John Harrington
	Lorna Buchanan		Anne Taylor
	Adrian Davies	cello	Adrian Shepherd
	Robert Jennings		Martin Heath
	Andrew Martin	double-bass	David Inglis
	Helena Moroney	harpsichord	Ian Robertson
	Andrew Morris
	Jane Reid

Corelli: Concerti grossi, Op. 6

Despite his importance and the enormous fame he achieved during his lifetime, remarkably little is known about Arcangelo Corelli. He was born on 17 February 1653, at Fusignano into an upper-class family – two of his brothers were enobled – and he received his musical education at Bologna. Apparently Corelli was not taught the violin until his fourteenth year, yet he was soon to become acknowledged as the greatest violinist of his day. At seventeen he entered the Accademia Filarmonica where he may have studied under the composer Giovanni Battista Bassani. The early part of Corelli's career is shrouded in mystery. We know he travelled abroad and gained for himself an enviable reputation, but details about these journeys are mostly vague and lacking corroboration. It has been said that he turned up in Paris where he aroused Lully's jealousy, but this story is almost certainly fictitious. At the age of about twenty he settled in Rome, and such was his reputation within a short time that violinists flocked to him for tuition from all over Europe. Unlike many composers of the time Corelli did not have to produce a vast amount of music in order to earn his living. For this he had to thank Cardinal Pietro Ottoboni, who became his friend and patron. Apart from a visit to Naples, Corelli spent the rest of his life living comfortably in the Cardinal's palace, the Cancellaria, where he directed a series of weekly concerts. These were recognised as the summit of Rome's musical life.

Unlike most musicians Corelli was keenly interested in paintings. Some of the best-known Italian artists of the day were among his close friends, and they helped him to build up, without buying, a valuable collection. Handel, who came to know Corelli well during his sojourn in Italy and had a very high opinion of him, said the Italian liked nothing better than saving money and looking at pictures he had not paid for. By all accounts Corelli, a most amenable character, went to considerable lengths to save. He dressed very shabbily for a man of his position, and invariably would walk rather than take a carriage. He died in Rome, rich and famous, on 8 January 1713.

Apart from one or two works the authenticity of which has not been proved, Corelli's entire output of compositions is contained in six volumes. Each comprises twelve works under the same opus number. Five of these volumes (Opp. 1–5) consist of violin or trio sonatas. The first of these sets appeared in print in 1681 and the last (which Corelli's pupil Geminiani arranged as concerti grossi) in 1700. These volumes, which were widely distributed, became regarded both as classics of their day and portents for the future – in other words, models on which later composers would build. Precisely when the twelve Concerti grossi, Op. 6 were first published is a disputed matter. Some authorities say they appeared in Rome in 1712, while others contend that the Amsterdam edition of 1714 is the earliest publication: it was followed in 1715 by an edition put out by John Walsh of London. This matter would be of little importance but for the fact that Corelli died in 1713, that is after the date of the supposed Rome printing, but before the Dutch edition appeared. Consequently we cannot be sure whether or not the composer authorised publication. Certainly he had deliberately withheld the concerti for many years. There is even a reference to them as early as 1689, which, of course, does not mean all of them were necessarily composed by that time. Whatever the date of the first publication, the concerti had previously circulated widely in manuscript copies. Why then did Corelli withhold these works? It has been suggested that he polished and repolished them before becoming totally satisfied, but this, like many another story surrounding the composer, is unlikely.

Probably the truth lies in the fact that there were no copyright laws. Once music had been published there was nothing to prevent others from producing their own editions without having to pay the composer a fee. Well before the turn of the century Corelli's international fame had been established, so he may have decided to retain the concerti for his own use. They were, after all, unique at the time, and were to remain so until Handel produced his own set of twelve Concerti grossi, Op. 6. The opus number is a clear indication that Handel intended his set as a tribute to Corelli's.

Both composers set a solo, or concertino, group of two violins and cello against the larger, or ripieno, string ensemble, and neither was constricted by an overall formal plan as regards the layout of movements. Corelli regarded his first eight and the last four concerti grossi as forming separate groups. Commentators have generally described the eight as church concertos and the four as chamber concertos. If this is so, Corelli treated the sonata da chiesa (church sonata) form – in which an opening slow movement is followed by a fast fugal one, a pattern usually repeated by the remaining two movements – with the utmost freedom. In the chamber concertos an introductory prelude is followed by a sequence of movements, most of them in dance forms, as in a suite. Although marked, the difference between the two types in these concertos is not so great as it would seem, since dance movements, even though they are not titled as such, appear also in the so-called church concertos.

Concerto No. 1 in D major

The first concerto in the Op. 6 set begins with a composite movement. Not only is there no relationship between any of its sections, but the first Allegro ends positively in the home key. Consequently what follows is virtually a new movement, although Corelli did not indicate it as such. The opening Largo of eleven bars serves as an introduction to the following Allegro, which brings the concertino group to the fore for the first time: the two violins play in close canon at the unison against an elaborate cello part. This section falls into three parts, each of which has an Adagio conclusion. The second Largo, which is akin to a stately minuet, leads to another Allegro. The principal part here is given alternatively to the first and second violins, there being no independent passages for the soloists. It is with the linked second and third movements that this concerto comes closest to the sonata da chiesa concept, for here we have an extended slow movement in B minor leading to a fugal Allegro in D major. The final movement, which spotlights the solo violins but not the cello, strongly suggests a gigue with its passages of running triplets.

Concerto No. 2 in F major

As the tempo markings indicate the opening movement consists of six sections but, unlike the corresponding movement of the First Concerto, this one forms a single whole that cannot be subdivided into separate movements. The Vivace of nine bars is no more than a call to attention serving as a prelude to the Allegro. This gives way to a short but deeply expressive Adagio in the minor and without solo passages. The Vivace and Allegro then return, setting out in the key of the dominant, while the Largo andante that concludes the movement forms an independent and very beautiful coda. It is begun by the concertino group, but when the full ensemble takes over, the top part and the bass change position. After the fugal second movement the third, which involves no solo participation, opens with an introductory Grave in D minor. It leads to an expressive Andante largo in the same key, ending however in C major in order to prepare the way for the final Allegro, a binary form, dance-like movement in which both sections are marked to be repeated.

Concerto No. 3 in C minor

Alone among the twelve concertos this one is in a key with more than two sharps or flats. However, Corelli slightly disguised the fact by omitting the third flat from the signature and writing it in as an accidental each time it appears. This concerto follows the sonata da chiesa pattern closely until the final movement, which is an addition to it. The solemn opening Largo is of substantial proportions, and it leads into the fugal Allegro. Although the Grave and Vivace are not laid out in the score as separate movements, together they balance the first two. As so often in Corelli's slow movements, there are no independent passages for the soloists in this Grave, which sets out in F minor (still retaining only two flats in the key signature) and comes to rest on a C major chord in order to lead into the Vivace. Far from being fugal this is a binary form movement. The final dance-like Allegro follows the same pattern, and in both cases the sections are bounded by repeat marks.

Concerto No. 4 in D major

The opening chordal Adagio, occupying a mere four bars, leads to a bustling Allegro in which the two solo violins steal the limelight: no independence is given to the solo cello. The second Adagio in B minor is again chordal and introductory, but on a much larger scale than the first. Up to the closing bars, which may be supplemented with a cadenza, quaver movement persists unbroken. The first and second ripieno violins play continuously, as do the violas from the third bar onwards, while the concertino group enjoys a large degree of independence even though their parts merge with, rather than stand out from, the overall ensemble – a remarkable and very effective piece of scoring. This Adagio contrasts strongly with the following Vivace in which the two solo violins once again steal most of the limelight, although this time the solo cello is not denied a share. The two parts of the final movement, both marked Allegro, are independent of each other. The first has the character of a gigue with its successions of quaver triplets. These give way to semiquavers in the second part so that, while the tempo may remain exactly the same, the degree of movement is increased.

Concerto No. 5 in B flat major

Corelli's key signature for this concerto contains only one instead of two flats: perhaps he thought this would make the work appear easier to play, since string players in general do not like flat keys. Of far more importance is the descending motive which recurs in varied form throughout the concerto. Its appearances are far too numerous to be the result of coincidence. We hear it for the first time at the end of the first movement's introductory Adagio, where it forms the cadence. It crops up several times during the following Allegro and returns in its original form at the beginning of the Adagio's coda.

Although slightly varying the pitch sequence, the second movement clearly takes the same motive as its point of departure, and it is prominent in varying guises during the third where it again supplies the coda, reverting to its original form for this purpose. It may not be very apparent in the G minor Largo section that opens the final movement – although even here it can be detected – but its influence on the Allegro that follows is little disguised by the fast tempo. One almost expects the work to end with this motive. This it does.

Concerto No. 6 in F major

The opening Adagio is an introduction of the chordal type with which we are already familiar, but in this instance it is on such a scale that Corelli regarded it as a movement in its own right. It ends on the dominant, so preparing the entry of the following Allegro by the concertino group. Although the bustling semiquaver passages have a decidedly soloistic look about them, they are invariably given to all the first violins. The D minor Largo, which gives very little independence to the soloists, is a deeply felt movement, largely contrapuntal but with short passages of harmonic writing. It leads into the Vivace during which the concertino group and the full ensemble alternate. As in the second movement, much of the rapid figuration is given to a full section of violins and not to a single one as might have been expected, but in this case firsts and seconds share in the display. There is a similar relationship between soli and tutti in the final Allegro, but here the technical demands are less exacting.

Concerto No. 7 in D major

As with Op. 6 No. 1, the opening movement of this concerto is a composite one, its three sections being totally independent of one another. The largest is the second, which is begun by the two solo violins in imitation and without accompaniment. The change to Adagio is totally unexpected, not so much because it is sudden as because of the surprising chord (within the context) that puts an end to the lively Allegro. After the short second movement, which is in binary form with both parts repeated, come the Andante largo – a term that indicates an easy-going rather than a slow pace. For this the key changes to B minor. Except towards the end the concertino group is in the forefront and there is much free imitation between the two solo violins. Throughout, the conception is contrapuntal. The movement ends on the dominant in preparation for the short fugal Allegro that follows. The final Vivace in 3/8 time has the character of a dance.

Concerto No. 8 in G minor (Fatto per la Notte di Natale)

The Eighth or 'Christmas' Concerto, which despite its key is given the signature of only one flat, is by far the best known. Written for the mass in celebration of the nativity, it has an additional movement tacked on at the end. This is headed 'Pastorale ad libitum', thereby signifying that the rest of the concerto could be performed away from the intended service. Today no one would dream of presenting the work in this incomplete form or restricting its appearances to Christmas. The opening Vivace, which obviously should not be rushed, is a summons to attention leading to the Grave. This was clearly intended to underline the solemnity of the occasion. By comparison the Allegro that follows, although contrapuntal, is decidedly joyous. The third movement, in E flat major (but still with only one flat instead of three in the key signature), contains a scherzo-like middle section, after which the opening part of the movement is repeated literally apart from the addition of a coda. The Vivace has the character of a minuet, while the following Allegro is almost equally straightforward: the virtuoso element appears here for the only time in the work. This movement leads straight into the G major Pastorale, for which the solitary flat in the key signature is negated but no sharp put in its place. Opinions differ widely as to the right tempo for this evocative music in siciliano rhythm. At one extreme it has been treated almost as a dirge and at the other as a lively dance. Cantilena wisely opts for something midway.

Concerto No. 9 in F major; Concerto No. 10 in C major; Concerto No. 11 in B flat major; Concerto No. 12 in F major

As mentioned above, the last four concertos are in the nature of suites, each consisting of a prelude followed by a series of movements, most of them in dance form. Because of their similarity and formal simplicity little, if anything, is to be gained by discussing them individually. Unlike the French overture or suite, in which the first movement is by far the largest and most important, Corelli's preludes are on a small scale and consequently serve as introductions to the series of dances. The Allegro movements in the Tenth and Twelfth Concertos are no less dance-like because they lack titles. In No. 10 the Adagio serves to introduce the Corrente and also to bring temporary respite from the home key (an idea taken up by Handel), but the Adagio in No. 12 is on a large scale and constitutes a movement in itself. It might well have found a place in one of the earlier concertos. Indeed, with its continuous quaver movement it is somewhat similar to the slow movement of No. 4, which is also in a minor key. Still more intense, and consequently providing a greater contrast with its surroundings, is the combined Adagio and Andante largo of No. 11. Here the Adagio serves as an introduction to a movement that, with its chromatic inflections and telling harmonic clashes, is as expressive as any in the first eight concertos.

© Malcolm Rayment

Also available

Haydn
The Early Symphonies: Nos 1–12
CHAN 6618

Also available

Boyce
12 Overtures
Concerti grossi
CHAN 6665(2)

You can now purchase Chandos CDs directly from us. For further details please telephone +44 (0) 1206 225225 for Chandos Direct. Fax: +44 (0) 1206 225201. Chandos Records Ltd, Chandos House, Commerce Way, Colchester, Essex CO2 8HQ, UK E-mail: chandosdirect@chandos.net Website: www.chandos.net

Any requests to license tracks from this or any other Chandos disc should be made directly to the Copyright Administrator, Chandos Records Ltd, at the above address.

Recording producer Brian Couzens

Sound engineer Ralph Couzens

Recording venue Henry Wood Hall, Glasgow; 1980–81

Front cover Detail from Still Life with Musical Instruments and a Small Classical Statue by Evaristo Baschenis (1617–1677)

Design Michael White-Robinson

Booklet typeset by Michael White-Robinson

© 1981 Chandos Records Ltd

© 2002 Chandos Records Ltd

Chandos Records Ltd, Colchester, Essex CO2 8HQ, England

Printed in the EU

CORELLI: CONCERTI GROSSI, OP. 6 - Cantilena/Adrian Shepherd

CHANDOS
CHAN 6663(2)

Arcangelo Corelli (1653–1713)

Concerti grossi, Op. 6

COMPACT DISC ONE

1	Concerto No. 1 in D major	13:38
2	Concerto No. 2 in F major	11:04
3	Concerto No. 3 in C minor	10:09
4	Concerto No. 4 in D major	10:23
5	Concerto No. 5 in B flat major	12:18
6	Concerto No. 6 in F major	13:55

TT 71:47

'...Shepherd and his group display a sensitivity and involvement that cannot be denied...'

Fanfare

COMPACT DISC TWO

1	Concerto No. 7 in D major	11:02
2	Concerto No. 8 in G minor Fatto per la Notte di Natale (Christmas Concerto)	16:46
3	Concerto No. 9 in F major	9:39
4	Concerto No. 10 in C major	14:10
5	Concerto No. 11 in B flat major	9:46
6	Concerto No. 12 in F major	10:24

TT 72:11

Cantilena
Adrian Shepherd

Printed in the EU

LC 7038 DDD TT 143:58

© 1981 Chandos Records Ltd © 2003 Chandos Records Ltd
Chandos Records Ltd • Colchester • Essex • England

CORELLI: CONCERTI GROSSI, OP. 6 - Cantilena/Adrian Shepherd

CHANDOS
CHAN 6663(2)